FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTS

- Global equities fell in June, as jitters intensified over the Greek debt talks. The nation closed its banks and imposed capital controls after negotiations with its creditors broke down.
- Elsewhere in Europe, leading indicators for the manufacturing and services sectors pointed to continued expansion, suggesting a nascent economic recovery, although data for business and consumer confidence appeared less upbeat.
- Still-underwhelming economic data, along with a sharp fall in its equity markets, led China's central bank to cut rates by another 25 basis points, and reduce its reserve requirement ratio by 0.5% for banks that lend to the agricultural sector and small enterprises.
- Brazilian equities and the real strengthened on the back of expectations that the Federal Reserve would raise its interest rates at a measured pace. However, the central bank increased its inflation forecast and expects a steeper economic contraction this year.
- Market sentiment is likely to remain lack lustre in the near term, as headlines continue to be dominated by developments in Greece. Uncertainty spiked higher following the nation's resounding vote against the bailout offer, which appeared to raise the probability of a Greek exit from the Eurozone. With no precedent, it is difficult to determine the economic and political impact a Grexit would have on Europe. China is another worry: recent sharp sell-offs suggest that investors are finding it harder to support valuations in the absence of significant earnings growth. A worse-than anticipated economic slowdown could dent confidence further. But the Chinese government remains committed to supporting the market and the economy, with further intervention to stabilise growth likely. In the US, the Federal Reserve has provided greater clarity on the timing of its policy tightening; with chair Janet Yellen indicating an increase later this year remains probable. On the corporate front, we are unlikely to see drastic improvements in earnings growth, given the challenging environment. But our strategy of investing in financially sound companies with sustainable businesses should help ensure healthy returns over the long term.
- There were no major changes to the portfolio in June.
