FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTS

In September 2016, the Fund was up 2.11%, underperforming the benchmark by 1.62%. We were overweight in Hong Kong, Indonesia and Philippines, and underweight in China, Korea and Malaysia. Sector-wise, we were overweight in Telecommunications, Financials and Consumer Services and underweight in Oil & Gas, Technology, Industrials, Basic Materials and Utilities. Year-to-date, the Fund is up 2.33%, underperforming the benchmark by 5.57%.

Asian equities rose 1.6% in USD terms in September, backed by improving oil prices, accommodative-to-easy central bank policies, and improving economic data out of China. Year-to-date, Asia ex-Japan has risen 11.2% in USD terms. Heading into 2017, we expect equity markets in Asia to be supported by (1) global central banks' proactive and aggressive policies to limit financial risks (2) bottoming of inflation and price stability for the commodity complex, and (3) a rebound in earnings growth. We note that OPEC's surprise agreement to curb production could signal a bottoming in the energy industry. Asia's corporate earnings is set for 11% yoy growth in 2017, a substantial recovery from the negative growth of the past year.

At a PER of 13x, valuations are reasonable. We remain buyers of the markets, especially on dips, and intend to be fully invested. Special focus is on stock ideas related to e-commerce, sharing economies, energy and basic materials. For country exposure, we like Indonesia, China and India, while we are cautious on Thailand and Philippines.
